YOUNG FARMERS LEARN HOME WIRING TECHNIQUES

Members of the Appomattox Young Farmers Club recently completed a series of classes dealing with farm and home lighting and wiring. They began with a class on the "Science of Seeing" to help them dettrmine the kinds and amounts of lighting needed around the home and farm. This class helped to determine the lighting needs of the various reading, studying, working, and recreation areas around the farm. This first class was followed by one on understanding electrical terms.

Planning the farm and home electrical wiring system was studied or using house plans to map out the course of wires and the locations of switches, receptables, and other outlets. A farm map was used in learning how to locate the center of the electrical load which would indicate the proper location for a meter pole.

The course of study was completed with a practical demonstration on the ABC's of wiring by instructor Lewis Motley and practice wiring by members of the Young Farmer group. A mock house studing panel was set up in the classroom and members wired it for lights, switches including a 3-way switch, duplex convenience outlet, and the panel fuse box. After wiring the panel it was plugged into a live circuit to test the work.

This is the 50th year since American consumers first saw the little round purple stamp with the words "U.S. Insp'd & P'S'D" " on larger meat cuts on the market. It is assurance that the meat comes from healthy animals and is clean, wholesome, and free of adulteration.

NEW BOOK IN THE COUNTY LIBRARY

Charmed Circle, by Susan Ertz. How often are you lucky enough to meet a family like the Prentisses — gracious, loving, radiant and secure, happy to be a world unto themselves? Even at the turn of the century such families were rare, and Myron Prentiss took an artist's pride in his. The family and their way of life were as much his creation (and as fine a tribute to his taste) as the great collection of Impressionist paintings that glowed in the rooms of the big house in New York. London and Paris were as familiar to the Prentiss' as their native city, and, oftentimes, more congenial. After a while, Myron's masterpiece - the family - began to change. And his children, born to flower within a charmed circle of love, comfort, and fastidious pleasure, responded in disturbing ways. However, stubbornly Myron and his beloved wife might refuse to see the facts, however gallantly they might deny their existence, the facts implacably were bringing Myron to the verge of losing all that he had cherished. With its magnificantly drawn people, its vivid and yet subtle detail, this long rich novel of an American family will continue to move you after you have read its final page.

If this is the age of automation, the payroll savings plan for buying U. S. Savings Bonds is the way to automatic thrift.

In Fashion Now

Never get so carried away with high fashion that you wear clothes that look awful on you. This is the best advice in the world. It is amazing the number of women who are lucky enough to have a good deal of money to spend on clothes, but who spend the money unwisely.

For some reason a great many women think that an expensive dress, that they put a lot of money in, must be either extreme in style, or gooked up and over designed. Some of the most becoming and most expensive clothes made are plain, devoid of frills of fancy trim. They depend on good fabric, fit and cut to achieve their style. For almost all women, this type dress is more becoming than a very fancy number.

French and Italian designers tell us that American women have wonderful figures. They say that a good figure has a high bust, slim torso, and tiny waist. It seems that American women are noted for their long legs and this is considered a fashion asset.

If you don't feel that your figure is all it should be, there are clothes that will do a lot to create the impression that you have a perfect figure. To insure an attractive body line, a good designer depends on inner construction that provides the figure for those who may not have their own built-in flattery.

This attention to cut and fit costs extra money, but it is more than worth the expense. Inner construction is not a hidden expense to the woman who really knows clothes.

A good buy in a piece of clothing will have three appeals. They are: eye appeal, sex appeal, and purse appeal. A fad type dress that is all the rage this months is not a wise investment unless you have a limitless amount to spend. Often it is a temptation to buy by whim—but don't do it. Take your time when you are choosing even an inexpensive item of clothing. Always keep in mind that if you don't need an item, it is expensive at any price.
